THANK YOU

FOR SEEING RESOURCES IN UNEXPECTED PLACES

Youth in Okanogan County are growing vegetables for school cafeterias, and creating healthy, sustainable, and employable futures.

Tribal Staff in Port Gamble S’Klallam are knocking on doors, getting youth out of bed and providing transportation to ensure 100% school completion.

Residents of the Edith Carrie neighborhood in Walla Walla, and many communities like it, are finding common ground to rebuild their neighborhood for improved health, safety, and cultural norms.

Businesses in Kitsap County are improving outcomes by supporting youth programs, offering internships and providing daycare subsidies to employees

EXPERIENCE PROVES

TOGETHER WE CONTINUE OUR SUCCESS

“Community Networks allow local communities to allocate resources to the right places. If this authority is taken away, needs will not be met, families will remain dysfunctional, and young people will become part of our expensive criminal justice system instead of becoming productive citizens.”
Honorable Alan Hancock, Island Superior Court

“It is exciting to have the Network as such a great partner. Because of the neighborhood engagement work and the service integration work done by the Network in Whatcom County in past years, the entire community gets behind what we are trying to do.”
Kathy Ramsay, Area Administrator of the Division of Child and Family Services

“The Network realizes the ability to collaborate is more powerful than individual programs. This is a successful strategy. It uses funding and time wisely and intently.”
Cathy Schindler, Housing Authority of Snohomish County, Snohomish Network Council Member & Chair

“The Washington Family Policy Council and its local Networks are inspiring a similar system in Wisconsin because of Washington’s effective approach to citizen involvement, focus on learning and organizational structure, which ties local findings to policy making.”
Jack Westman, MD, Professor Emeritus of Psychiatry, University of Wisconsin, on decision to form a Family Policy Commission.
